APRIL 15 & 17

Adriana Isadora Morales 15 Apr

On a Sunday morning, January 26 2014, my family and I received a message that my father had gotten into an accident while working in the AEE. He got hospitalized in intensive care for five months, and I almost couldn't visit him as much as I wanted.

You think I'm weak
Yet that just makes me unstoppable
I dare you, try and speak
For my soul is unconquerable.

- During these days I was absent due to sickness, but my class was working on writing poetry and discussing famous poets.
- If there is anything that can make you master poetry is imitating the masters.

- Knowing about their life and inspirations can help you understand a but better their writing styles.

In the previous class, Alanis, Fabián, and Julián talked about the poets each selected.

APRIL 19 & 23

My classmates presented on their chosen poets and discussed each of them. I was also away this day.

A good way to learn about a topic is while discussing it with others rather than studying it alone. Helps you see others point of view.

We finished our presentations on this day and we watched a video about a Demonstrative speech.

To start it off we listed off three things we were good at. This makes sense, since it's better to do this kind of speech about something you dominate.

Conclusion (summary)

Your own story isn't something you just do out of the blue. It's something you must follow to successfully complete it. Just like any other project, it requires planning, brainstorm, plan, write a draft, revise, edit, and proofread for any errors you might have missed.

What We Did

We worked on building our demonstrative speech with the things we know best. Having a well structured speech makes you present more fluently.

What We Know

Going back through our memories of our favorite activities makes you reflect on how many things you've learned throughout the year and that all of your time wasn't wasted.

Listening-Speaking

Demonstrative

Our classmates started presenting their demonstrative speeches, and all of them were very creative and interesting. Practicing oral presentations in the way of a speech helps you improve your public speaking.

Speech

Public speaking is a skill that most of us should practice, and having to talk about something we're good at can help us improve in it. All of us finalized presenting, and we each talked about topics that were helpful. As things such as preparing your face before makeup and dressing well.

CONCLUSION

1

We've closed with a flourish this course as we finished poetry learning the steps of the masters and their interesting life stories.

2

And to top it of, the cherry on top is something we've been doing the entire year. Public speaking, which is essential for our upcoming years. I've definitely learnt a lot, and I will cherish not only these 8 class memories but the 70 memories I've shared.

THANK YOU
